

From: d j
To: Microsoft ATR
Date: 1/24/02 8:49am
Subject: Microsoft Anti-Trust case

Dear Sir/Madam:

I have writing software for almost 20 years, much of that time I have been using products from Microsoft. I have attained several of Microsoft's certification levels and I do believe they employ some highly-talented people.

Sadly, it is also evident Microsoft has resorted to business practices that leave a great deal to be desired. I say sadly because I feel their products are more than able to compete and win on merit alone, yet in their apparent quest and greed for total market domination, they have crossed the over from competitor to tyrant.

I earnestly implore you to consider with great care the impact your decision will have not so much on the present, but on the future. History is rich with examples of too much power consolidated in one place and few of them are pleasant.

If others are not given a level playing field to compete upon, then we deserve what we get - no choice but one.

Microsoft should not be prevented from competing; this would be wrong. They should be made to play by the same rules as everyone else and penalized justly - as should anyone else - when they violate the rules.

Sincerely,
Dexter W. Jones

Send and receive Hotmail on your mobile device: <http://mobile.msn.com>